Dedicated to the invisible
city dwellers of the world.
Someday, we will all be invisible.

First, a toast to all those whose lives inspired these stories, giants of their own times, Goliaths, who have now vanished from the streets of Phoenix. They lived like shadows, like clouds of vapor in the air, yet their palpitating hearts still tell stories amidst the city's bustle and grime.

My gratitude embraces Juan Bruce-Novoa, Director of the Chicano/Latino Literary Prize, his gracious assistant, Evelyn Flores, and Sheila Ortiz-Taylor, the contest judge in 2008. Your warm-hearted welcome at the University of California, Irvine was most appreciated, and the prestigious award I received will remain one of my prized possessions.

Nicolás Kanellos, Director of Arte Público Press, and my esteemed editor, Gabriela Baeza Ventura mil gracias for your confidence in my work and your pledge to publish books that search the hearts of the great and small, the simple and proud, and the loved and unloved among us. Wisdom and love abound when the stories of every nation and culture are allowed to take their place in the universal chorus of storytellers.
